From the Author
It's now been six years since I left my corporate life to take my career break. I couldn't have imagined the world I found nor the power and confidence that came as a result of my time pursuing my personal passions. After my break ended, I decided that I didn't want to go back to corporate and rather endeavored to demystify career breaks and show other people how they can take their own trip. The community is very dynamic and there's always a new wave of career breakers taking off to see the world every month, each with their own reason, dream, and itinerary.
CareerBreakSecrets.com was born in late 2009 and serves as my main gateway for publishing stories, tips, and advice. By the end of 2012, I will have published almost 500 articles. Now in 2012, I am expanding the platform to get the word out to even more people. The first season of The Career Break Travel Show is on its way to TV globally. And, there's a special pride I have in publishing The Career Break Traveler's Handbook.
