I asked their dad to play it in the car when they drove down I 24 to Nashville. I asked the kids if they would ride a mule along one of the cliffs lining the highway. Haha, 3 chattering kids (10yr old, 8yr old and 6yr old) retelling the story. We are raising our own storytellers.0 of 0 people

Don Davis is the Greatest!By BLTI heard this story live at the Timpanogos Story Telling Festival in Orem, Utah and just had to buy a copy before going to the Grand Canyon this summer. Watch out for the mules on the trail!0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Great storyteller and stories.By CustomerThis is the best story telling we have ever heard. We have listened and laughed at it so many times. It makes traveling so delightful.

Most people who decide to take the mule ride through the Grand Canyon focus on the spectacular beauty around them. Donald Davis, however, found his focus trained sharply on the 48-inch-wide trail whose ledge drops 700 feet to the Colorado River. Interweaving his trademark humor with vivid detail of perhaps the most remarkable experience offered by the National Park Service, Davis paints for us the stages of this adventure: the gleeful anticipation, the encounter with his own personal mule, the

From AudioFileWith his rich Southern accent, storyteller Donald Davis takes listeners traveling to the Grand Canyon and to the Appalachians. When Davis first encountered the income tax as a boy, his father suggested he read the federal budget until he found where he wanted his money to go. Davis decreed his personal ownership of the national parks. Half of this CD tells of his first visit, recently, to the Grand Canyon. After a harrowing, hilarious journey on muleback, told with deadpan earnestness, Davis is ready to give his share of that park away. The following tales of childhood visits to his grandparents' log cabin in Appalachia have classic "scary story" features and warm family resolutions. D.P.D.
